Causes of Impotence

The process of sensual arousal is very complex. It includes hormones, emotions, nerves, muscles, blood vessels, and the brain. Any sort of malfunction can cause erectile dysfunction. Even stress and other kinds of psychological issues can lead to erectile disorder. Even anxiety in men can cause them difficulty while they try to attain an erection. This can restrict the flow of blood to the male organ.

The problem of erectile disorder can be caused by:

- Heart disease or clogged blood vessels
- High blood pressure
- Diabetes
- Obesity
- Metabolic syndrome
- Multiple sclerosis
- Parkinson's disease
- Low testosterone
- Peyronie's disease
- Certain medications
- Smoking
- Alcoholism
- Prostate treatments
- Brain or spinal cord injuries
- Stroke
- Radiation therapy to the testicles
- Certain types of surgery on the prostate or bladder

Diagnosis of Impotence in Males

A lot of doctors identify the systemic causes behind the occurrence of erectile disorder. There are a variety of tests that can lead to erection failure, or ED:

- Blood tests to check cholesterol, testosterone, and glucose levels

- Urinalysis to look for signs of diabetes
- Ultrasound to check blood flow to the male organ
- Overnight erection test
